"From the records of the Board of Public Works it appears that on the 7th of february, 18sh, a certain contract was nade between William Mahone on the one sart and William P. Clyde and others, of the second part, for the purchase of the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio railroad. Among other things that contract contained a clause stepulating that the purchasers should comply with certain terms to be consecuted upon between them and the President (General Mahone) and Board of Directors of the Massachusetts Republican State Convention of Wednesday last, which had Convention of Wednesday last, which had contained the President of the Massachusetts Republican State Convention of Wednesday last, which had convented upon between them and the President of the Massachusetts Republican State Convention of Wednesday last, which had convented upon between them and the President of the claims to the extent of a dollar.

"It was in every sense a smaller but no less significant fact that he turned all the printers out of the Whig office because they were union men, as is well set forth in the following from a late number of the State newspaper:

following from a late number of the State newspaper:

"It was William Mahone who as the controller of a newspaper required the unpaid printers working on that paper to accept stock in that paper in satisfaction of their debt; and it was only a short time after this injustice had been perpetrated that these same printers came to their work one day to find that, without any warning having been given them, their places had been filled and they had been rudely driven out of employment. It was this same William Mahone who told an intelligent and worthy young printer that he was opposed to the typographical union and that he was determined to do what he could to break it up."

Not Mistaken.

The Boston Herald says: "Captain McKinney, the Democratic candidate for Governor of Virginia, is authority for the statement that the fiercest opponents of the colored people in that State are the northern people who migrate thither and settle down. Either Captain McKinney is mistaken or else the northern people who move to Virginia don't show their bringing up."

McKinney is mistaken or else the northern people who move to Virginia dou't show their bringing up."

Captain McKinner is not mistaken. His observation in respect of this matter tallies with that of every one else who has studied the relations of the northern settler in the South to the negro. A northern man who comes South for the purpose of making this section his home may be imbued never so much with sentimental ideas regarding the negro, but it does not take long for the practical issue to knock sentimentalism out of him. Inherent race prejudice, which, owing to his native environments and his bringing up had no chance to develop, asserts itself more strongly in him even than it does in the southern whites, and this, together with common sense, teaches him that white supremacy is the only guarantee of the preservation of civilization in the community of his newly-made home. As a consequence he will not take an inch from the negro, where the southern man would take an ell, and his sympathy for the man and the brother wanes just in proportion as the two are thrown in contact, either in the capacity of employer and employe or otherwise. Proof of this is furnished by the fact that when a negro gets into trouble he does not turn to the northern settler, but to his "folks"—that is, to members of the white family in which he was raised.

Why He Did It.

Why He Did It.

The Dispatch publishes Mahone's speech in full. A Republican was wondering why it did it, claiming, as he did, that it was a tremendous campaign document for his side. We told him the answer was plain: "The Dispatch published it to knock it down." And it did so, in its editoral on the speech, completely.—Danville Times.

We furnished the speech to the Democratic speakers all over the Commonwealth. No good lawyer is satisfied with anybody else's statement of the opinion of a court; and no shrewd stumper would give a button for a campaign document purporting to be the words of his opponent when they were really the words of somebody else.

with those who accepted it no interest in the claims themselves, and if any remark mine or the force of the facts related rind an intimation to the contrary it is it to General Mahone that I should say But it is by no means clear that General Mahone did not possess a substantial west of a collatoral kind to urge the promise upon the claimants. He was sted in the service of the purchasers of milroad in a manner very interesting in.

Manone seems to have that sort of opinion of the people of Virginia, but he will find out before election-day that he is the one that is to be "worked off."

Wise and his circulars is acknowledged.
How nearly they approximated the facts in substance, and what weight is to be attached to the facts as they now appear, it is for a candid public to judge. One thing BRIEF COMMENT.
